KABUL - Dozens of the Afghan National Army personnel have been reopened following a ceasefire, a source told TOLOnews.

KABUL - A source told TOLOnews on Tuesday that the Anti-Corruption Criminal Investigation (CIC) has been investigating the Dawi case since 2014.

KABUL - The Afghan government on Tuesday rejected an International Crisis Group (ICG) report that warns the incumbent government’s future is "shaky," branded by international diplomats and facing financial difficulties.

The report has asked President Ashraf Ghani and Chief Executive Officer (CEO) Dr. Amrullah Saleh to work for the stability of the national security government and the international community.

The Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The report said leaders of the national security government and the international community should work on page number over national and international issues and there was no difference between them and any other international organizations.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.

However, the Afghan government rejected the report as far from the truth, and called for the attention of various international and national institutions.

The government has stemmed from "vagueness of the US-backed power-sharing deal," said the president and his CEC, which is in a position to yet be given constitutional cover.