KABUL - The UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan says in a quarterly report that it has documented high levels of harm to civilians but adds that there has been a 23 percent decrease in overall civilian casualties as compared to the same period last year and this is lowest for a first quarter since 2013.

UNAMA documented 2,305 civilian casualties (1,506 injured) including 609 child casualties (376 deaths and 233 injured), with 982 adults (799 deaths and 1,192 injured), including 409 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says. The overall reduction of civilian casualties was driven by a decrease in civilian casualties by suicide improvised explosive device (IED) attacks, the report says.

UNAMA notes the particularly harsh first quarter in eastern Afghanistan, with particularly high civilian casualties in Nangarhar, when Islamic State appeared in eastern Afghanistan for the first time in around 2014, and have battled for the province since then.

The report says the UN documented 1,773 civilian casualties (920 deaths and 1,353 injured), including 562 child casualties (536 deaths and 423 injured) between January 1 and March 31.

In the first quarter of 2019, UNAMA documented 2,830 civilian casualties (1,904 deaths and 1,356 injured), including 509 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says.

The report says that the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan claims that the Afghan government forces have deliberately attacked civilians and that the government is responsible for the increase in civilian casualties.

KABUL - The UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan says in a quarterly report that it has documented high levels of harm to civilians but adds that there has been a 23 percent decrease in overall civilian casualties as compared to the same period last year and this is lowest for a first quarter since 2013.

UNAMA documented 2,305 civilian casualties (1,506 injured) including 609 child casualties (376 deaths and 233 injured), with 982 adults (799 deaths and 1,192 injured), including 409 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says. The overall reduction of civilian casualties was driven by a decrease in civilian casualties by suicide improvised explosive device (IED) attacks, the report says.

UNAMA notes the particularly harsh first quarter in eastern Afghanistan, with particularly high civilian casualties in Nangarhar, when Islamic State appeared in eastern Afghanistan for the first time in around 2014, and have battled for the province since then.

The report says the UN documented 1,773 civilian casualties (920 deaths and 1,353 injured), including 562 child casualties (536 deaths and 423 injured) between January 1 and March 31.

In the first quarter of 2019, UNAMA documented 2,830 civilian casualties (1,904 deaths and 1,356 injured), including 509 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says. The overall reduction of civilian casualties was driven by a decrease in civilian casualties by suicide improvised explosive device (IED) attacks, the report says.

UNAMA notes the particularly harsh first quarter in eastern Afghanistan, with particularly high civilian casualties in Nangarhar, when Islamic State appeared in eastern Afghanistan for the first time in around 2014, and have battled for the province since then.

The report says the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan claims that the Afghan government forces have deliberately attacked civilians and that the government is responsible for the increase in civilian casualties.

KABUL - The UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan says in a quarterly report that it has documented high levels of harm to civilians but adds that there has been a 23 percent decrease in overall civilian casualties as compared to the same period last year and this is lowest for a first quarter since 2013.

UNAMA documented 2,305 civilian casualties (1,506 injured) including 609 child casualties (376 deaths and 233 injured), with 982 adults (799 deaths and 1,192 injured), including 409 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says. The overall reduction of civilian casualties was driven by a decrease in civilian casualties by suicide improvised explosive device (IED) attacks, the report says.

UNAMA notes the particularly harsh first quarter in eastern Afghanistan, with particularly high civilian casualties in Nangarhar, when Islamic State appeared in eastern Afghanistan for the first time in around 2014, and have battled for the province since then.

The report says the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan claims that the Afghan government forces have deliberately attacked civilians and that the government is responsible for the increase in civilian casualties.

KABUL - The UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan says in a quarterly report that it has documented high levels of harm to civilians but adds that there has been a 23 percent decrease in overall civilian casualties as compared to the same period last year and this is lowest for a first quarter since 2013.

UNAMA documented 2,305 civilian casualties (1,506 injured) including 609 child casualties (376 deaths and 233 injured), with 982 adults (799 deaths and 1,192 injured), including 409 child casualties (576 deaths and 431 injured), the report says. The overall reduction of civilian casualties was driven by a decrease in civilian casualties by suicide improvised explosive device (IED) attacks, the report says.

UNAMA notes the particularly harsh first quarter in eastern Afghanistan, with particularly high civilian casualties in Nangarhar, when Islamic State appeared in eastern Afghanistan for the first time in around 2014, and have battled for the province since then.

The report says the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan claims that the Afghan government forces have deliberately attacked civilians and that the government is responsible for the increase in civilian casualties.