The Challenges of Integration in Afghanistan

A fter the defeat of Taliban, it was expected that Afghanistan would lose instability and disorder behind it and it would start to become a political entity. Afghanistan was supposed to take a new path, a path that would do away with the dictation of external forces and strive towards utilizing the resources of the country. This has done a great damage to the prospects of integration and harmony in Afghanistan. The international community has been watching the development of Afghanistan with great interest. It was expected that the integration process would begin immediately after the defeat of Taliban. However, since then, the political process has been taking place in Afghanistan. For the reintegration of Afghan society it is necessary that all the major parties take part in the political process. Along with the political process, the economic and social process also has to be taken into consideration. This process will be a two-fold process. Along with the political process, the economic and social process also has to be taken into consideration. This process will be a two-fold process. It cannot be the result of a miracle or the result of a single process. For making integration possible, it is necessary to bring about a viable agreement with Taliban, let alone the integration of the entire Afghan society within an effective political system will definitely result in the production of any fruitful outcome. In fact, the integration of Afghan society is a two-fold process. Along with the political process, the economic and social process also has to be taken into consideration. This process will be a two-fold process. It cannot be the result of a miracle or the result of a single process. For making integration possible, it is necessary to bring about a viable agreement with Taliban, let alone the integration of the entire Afghan society. For making integration possible, it is necessary to bring about a viable agreement with Taliban, let alone the integration of the entire Afghan society. For the reintegration of Afghan society it is necessary that all the major parties take part in the political process. Along with the political process, the economic and social process also has to be taken into consideration. This process will be a two-fold process. Along with the political process, the economic and social process also has to be taken into consideration. This process will be a two-fold process. It cannot be the result of a miracle or the result of a single process. For making integration possible, it is necessary to bring about a viable agreement with Taliban, let alone the integration of the entire Afghan society.