Killing a Silent Killer of Women

By Muttaquina Hossain

In public health, discussions relating to women typically focus on maternal mortality, malnutrition, and more recently, violence against women. However, one facet of malnutrition that often goes unacknowledged is anemia. Anemia is the world’s most common nutritional disorder, affecting more than 2 billion people globally. Anemia can be caused by a variety of factors, including iron deficiency, which can lead to a decrease in oxygen-carrying capacity and result in fatigue, weakness, and shortness of breath.

Anemia can also be caused by other factors, such as vitamin deficiency, which can lead to a lack of energy and difficulty in performing daily activities.

Nonetheless, we cannot count on companies to make the needed changes without meaningful incentives for them to do so. For example, providing incentives to improve the quality of nutrition programs, such as by offering tax benefits for companies that produce nutritious foods, can help ensure that women and children receive the nutrients they need for long-term health.

This reinforces the findings of separate studies, in which fortification of food products significantly increased anemia rates. The benefits of fortification programs include increased energy levels, reduced hospital admissions, and improved school performance.

Targeting Civilians – A Lukewarm Response to Peace

By: Hujatullah Zia

The Taliban leadership continues to talk with the US representatives and the Afghan government. However, nothing has changed. The Taliban has adopted an equivocal policy which triggered mixed feelings. The Taliban was said to be holding talks on the possibility of ending its bloodshed and bringing peace to the country. However, the Taliban’s stance has not changed, and it continues to kill people indiscriminately.

The Taliban has increased its attacks, targeting government officials, soldiers, and civilians, as well as security forces. The Taliban has carried out mortar attacks and suicide bombings, killing and injuring many people.

The US and the Afghan government have expressed their concern and tried to negotiate with the Taliban. However, the Taliban has remained firm in its stance, and has not shown any signs of moderation.

The Taliban has also carried out attacks on military bases and Afghan government institutions, causing widespread destruction and loss of life.
