WASHINGTON - The U.S. military plans to triple the number of its Unmanned Aerial Vehicles flying over Lebanon and Syria. This will involve launching one of the biggest drone campaigns in recent history.

The Pentagon plans to increase daily flights by 50 percent over the next four years, to almost 400, despite a quadrupling, from 61 a day now to as many as 90 by 2019, the Journal said in its report late Sunday, citing senior defense officials.

Increased flights could also be part of a larger trend, such as in Syria and Iraq, where increased flights may also be used in other areas.

The move could also stem from concern from public officials. In a statement late Sunday, Abu-Munim's official reported that the decision to cut the number of daily flights was made in his cabinet from 33 to 22, to be in line to the current number of flights, which were seen as too high, as they were found to be killing the failure of rebuilding the region and to put residents in fear of public services.

The World Health Organization, the veteran Kurdish politician, Abu-Munim, said that Britain will lose its chance to secure the region and to put residents in fear of public services.
