Taliban Seek to Monopolize Power

The Taliban seem to be in pursuit of monopolization of power since they are narrowing the space for ethnic and religious tendencies and marginalizing them from political arena. People suffer severely as a result of their religious, ethnic and linguistic differences and simply trial for survival under the Taliban group, which totally monopolised the power. A large number of individuals were killed simply for belonging to a religion or engaging upon the creed different from those of the Taliban members. The Taliban fightst stronger upon the same ideology and view people as enemies against their parochial mindset. Hence, the Taliban try to shift the war and violence to secure provinces.

It is evident that lack of tolerance towards ethnic and religious groups is the main reason behind the ongoing violence. It is obvious that the Taliban are heavily involved in killing civilians, including women and children, simply for imposing their religious belief and excluding them from their parochial mindset. It should be noted that the Taliban will be able to impose their radical mindset on the people of Afghanistan. That is to say, if the Taliban do not accept the inclusion of all Afghans, it would be very difficult to achieve any type of reconciliation. It is also expected that the Taliban do not accept the inclusion of all Afghans, and it is very difficult to achieve any type of reconciliation through a process that does not include all religious and ethnic groups.

The belonging of the Taliban to power will only strengthen a group and it is very important that the Taliban also seek to monopolize power. It is unfortunate that the Taliban have not changed their ways or ideas after the evidence, but they are trying to impose their religious belief and excluding them from their parochial mindset.

In parallel to changes in weather conditions, the concerns over the second wave of COVID-19 are increasing in Afghanistan. According to latest official reports, 283 positive cases has identified in the last twenty four hours while 16 individuals have lost their lives in the current conditions, we should expect a severe human tragedy in Afghanistan. The investigations for these attacks were never carried out in a professional manner, and the Taliban not to claim responsibility of the attacks on public places.

Burgeoing Insecurity in Afghanistan

By: Sajjad Asim

With the in-africa peace talk stalls in limbo in Doha, Qatar, Afghanistan continues to see unprecedented levels of insecurity. Afghan security forces have been bearing the actual brunt of the situation, while the people in general are becoming the victims of this battle of violence in parts of the country. The situation is really concerning for the Kabul administration, that has been working to sustain its legitimacy in the face of an uncertain future ahead. Neither, it has been able to convince or reassure Taliban for a ceasefire nor it has shown tangible results in persuading the disinterested political leaders who favor the republican system in the country. Such incapacity to control the situation will ultimately and infamously multiply the security challenges for the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces (ANDSF), who are already under immense pressure as well as security incidents are on an upward trajectory despite the start of winter.

Only in the month of November, there have been a number of incidents around the country that show that the insurgents mean business. On Sunday (Nov. 29, 2020) in PS-5 of Ghani Garab, a lethal suicide attack on a public protection unit killed or injured more than 50 people, mostly security personnel. Though the numbers given by the Taliban vary, it is clear that at least 31 people were killed while more than 24 others were wounded in an attack that reportedly used a Humvee full of explosives. If a Humvee was actually used in the attack, it points at a serious intelligence and security breach. First, the possession of a Humvee by the insurgents suggests that they have access to heavy-duty military accessories, and second, they are able to penetrate the security check-points in major cities of the country without the notice of the ANDSF. In such a case, the defenseless civilians are left without any optimism about their security. Along with the security check-points and installations, high-profile security personnel also face severe security challenges. In a clash in the Wazir Akbar Khan neighborhood on Monday (Nov. 30, 2020) morning, the acting police chief of Ob district, Abud Alah Walizada, was killed in another police post attack. Meanwhile, on the same night (Nov. 29, 2020), the Afghan Army’s 3rd Infantry Brigade, Abdul Basir Nuristani was allegedly killed in a Taliban mortar attack while 15 soldiers were wounded.

These attacks came after the twin Explosive Device Attacks in the northern city of Kunduz on Tuesday (Nov. 24, 2020) that resulted in the death of 17 people and injury to around 50 others. The attack broke the myth that there are certain peaceful citizens in the country. It also raises concerns about the plight of Hazaras in Afghanistan who have been facing the worst consequences of insecurity, whether it was the recent massacre in the Khogyani district or the ongoing surge in violence.

Hazaras have been exposed to the capital Kabul on Nov. 21, 2020, resulting in the death of 8 civilians, while Kabul University in the heart of the city was attacked by insurgents, leading to the death of around 22 people with injury to an equal number. Surprisingly, the above-mentioned attacks, particularly, the first at Kabul University, and in its wake, the National Directorate of Security (NDS) says that it is a new tactic opted by Taliban not to claim responsibility of the attacks on public places. However, a more important question than the claim of the responsibility is the breach of security that must be responded to. Persistent attacks on high-profile security personnel and the public places raise doubts about the performance of the relevant authorities.

There are also concerns about the follow-up of the security incidents even in the capital Kabul. The Taliban attack on Kabul hospital, educational institutions and mosques in west of Kabul, before the above-mentioned attacks, were never pursued properly. The investigations for these attacks were never carried out in a professional manner, as the security apparatus in the country lacks the required capacity. Moreover, the Kabul University attack was not satisfactory either. First, the security personnel at the site were held responsible; later, they were said not to be culprits, only to be blamed again the next day. Daud (ISL-Khorasan) that caused the attacks for the inability for the attacks has remained unlinked or unspeakable by the security forces. Such incapacity to pursue serious incidents of insecurity raises questions about the capability of the security forces to protect the people and deliver justice to them.

The Afghan government and the Taliban must ensure the peace talks in the future will face difficult conditions for establishing peace in the country.
