Afghans cannot tolerate imposed War Anymore, Ghani tells US Envoy

KABUL - The Afghan government cannot tolerate terrorist attacks and war anymore, President Mohammad Ashraf Ghani said on Thursday. He called on the United States to help stabilize the country, which is currently facing increasing pressure from the Taliban and Daesh.

Ghani said that the US and other international partners should work together to ensure peace and stability in Afghanistan. He also emphasized the importance of regional cooperation and coordination in addressing the security challenges.

"We cannot tolerate terrorist attacks or war anymore," Ghani said. "We need continued support from the international community to stabilize the country and ensure peace and stability for all Afghans."
