Karzai claimed the explosive report posted by the Post confirmed his complaints about US spending. Much of the money spent by the US had gone to contractors and private security firms, he explained. “What could we do? It was US money coming here and used by them and used for means that did not help Afghanistan,” commented the former president. With the publication of a trove of documents, Washington would begin to change its attitude toward war in Afghanistan. (TOLO NEWS)

War in Afghanistan: Complex and Controversial

The Afghan conflict has reached a critical stage where the United States and its allies are considering a new strategy to end the war. The Afghan government has been unable to secure a lasting peace, and the Taliban continue to control large areas of the country. The situation is further complicated by the presence of other armed groups, including ISIS-Khorasan, which has been responsible for a number of attacks in recent years.

Despite the efforts of the United States and its allies, the Afghan conflict has not shown signs of improvement. The Taliban have been unwilling to negotiate in good faith, and the Afghan government has been unable to provide security and stability for its citizens. The situation is further exacerbated by the fact that the international community has become disillusioned with the Afghan government and its ability to deliver on its promises.

The US government has been criticized for its lack of strategy in Afghanistan and its failure to engage the Afghan government in a meaningful way. The Trump administration has been criticized for its abrupt withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan, which has left the country vulnerable to further attacks.

The Afghan conflict is a complex and multifaceted problem that requires a comprehensive and long-term solution. The international community must work together to ensure that the Afghan government is able to deliver on its promises and provide security and stability for its citizens. This will require a significant investment of time, resources, and political will.

Regional Challenges of South Asia in Globalisation

By: Rajkumar Singh

Broadly, there are three main sets of challenges ahead for the NAM countries in the globalisation of the sphere of foreign policy, namely, making strategic choices, and secondly, responding to the challenges of globalisation in a way that is in line with their national interests. This would be an area that is very sensitive to their domestic policies, notably the welfare of women, energy, environment, Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD), and thirdly evolving a new kind of regionalism on what constitutes their national interest.

Background of regional relations

At the present, the prevailing situation between India and Pakistan calls for an appropriate strategy to be shared by the civilian leadership on both sides. The strategic choices of the Indian government on the one hand, and the Pakistan government on the other, have implications for the situation that prevails throughout the world, with the current trends and those of the major powers. Pakistan has created many opportunities for itself through its military adventurism, and has not been able to seize them. This has made the US military and civilian leaders more determined to push the US to think outside the box, and to make a decision on the need to make good their promises to win in Afghanistan. The group added that the cease-fire is simply a new attempt to address the growing grievances of the Afghan community.

At the junction, the international community should encourage the civil bodies to take care of their citizens, stop being a party to the Afghan war, and try to reach an agreement with its US interlocutors. They, which will generate hatred among the public. This means that, in the Afghan war, the US administration and the Karzai government, if continued, will have to reduce violence, the graph of civilian casualties will grow higher and higher, and the Afghan government.

Peace process and pressure the Taliban to negotiate directly with the Afghan government. The United Nations Climate Change Conference (COP25) currently taking place in Madrid is a major step towards addressing the problem of climate change, but it will not be enough on its own. We need to act on a global scale, and the world needs to work together to achieve our goals.

The report also notes that the COP25 conference is an opportunity to showcase how countries around the world are already taking action to fight climate change. It highlights several examples of successful climate action, including the use of renewable energy sources and the development of cleaner technologies.

But the role of the national government remains important. Despite the politicization and the rising conflict, the Afghan government has been able to secure a lasting peace, and the Taliban continue to control large areas of the country. The situation is further complicated by the presence of other armed groups, including ISIS-Khorasan, which has been responsible for a number of attacks in recent years.
