The Age of Enlightenment

Enlightenment was built through open societies that share information. Where there is information, there is enlightenment. Where there is deception, there is ignorance. Where there is sharing of power, none of us are accountable. Where there is a complete lack of control, our human dignity was taken away.

Church and state grew to be separate entities; the churches, the leaders, the flagging of their intentions, the power of the clergy and emperor, etc. No one dared listen to a word against the status quo as their rights were violated and their human dignity was trampled upon.

Crucially, each barbaric attitude was written down to the darker of the human cause and the spirit of subversion filled the minds. The sow was so fat that the sow would grow and the sow would grow like a monster, which would be a monster to be marveled at. The sow was killed and the sow was killed, and there was no time for the sow that was killed. But the sow was killed, but the sow was killed, and there was no time for the sow that was killed.

The Enlightenment was a period of profound intellectual and cultural change in Europe, particularly in the 18th century. It was characterized by a growing emphasis on reason, science, individualism, and the rejection of traditional authority and superstition. Enlightenment thinkers believed in the power of reason and science to improve the lives of individuals and societies, and they sought to promote political and social reforms that would lead to greater freedom, equality, and prosperity.

Enlightenment ideas and ideals were reflected in the founding principles of modern democracies, and they continue to shape political and social thought in the 21st century.
