President Donald Trump has said that the U.S. will stand up for itself and the world’s national interests.

The two global powers have faced off in recent months with both sides denouncing Iran’s nuclear program and its ballistic missile program.

The two countries have been at odds over a range of issues, including Iran’s nuclear program, its support for militant groups, and its interference in the region.

Trump has threatened to withdraw from the Iran nuclear deal and has called for new sanctions against Iran.

In response, Iranian President Hassan Rouhani has said that Iran will not negotiate with the U.S. and has threatened to enrich uranium and increase its production of advanced centrifuges.

The situation is tense and there is a real possibility of a military confrontation.

The U.S. and Iran are both nuclear powers and both have significant military capabilities.

The U.S. has a much larger and more capable military, but Iran has a strong air defense system and is capable of launching missiles from its territory.

The situation in the region is volatile and there is a risk of a potential conflict.

It is crucial for the international community to work together to de-escalate tensions and prevent a military confrontation.

The U.S. and Iran should engage in direct talks to address their differences and work towards a peaceful resolution.

In the meantime, the international community should work to provide humanitarian aid and assistance to the Iranian people, who are facing significant challenges.

The status of the nuclear deal and the prospects for a peaceful resolution to the crisis are uncertain.

It is essential for the international community to continue to monitor the situation closely and to take action to prevent a potential conflict.