Turkmenistan will Sell Afghanistan More Power

TEHRAN - Afghanistan's National Security Advisor Hamdullah Mohib met with Iran's Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif on Tuesday after a meeting earlier in the day with the Iranian counterpart Ali Shamkhani, where the two discussed issues of mutual interest and security concerns relating to the region.

During his meeting with Zarif, Mohib discussed issues of mutual interest, as well as the Afghan peace process, and the latest developments in the region. Mohib and his accompanying delegation arrived in Tehran on Tuesday for a one-day visit. During his earlier meeting, Shamkhani told Mohib that "Afghanistan has a special place in the foreign policy of Iran due to the many commonalities and ties between the two nations."

According to Mehr News Agency, Shamkhani touched the issue of "common threats and interests" of the two countries on various issues, especially the issue of the spread of terrorism and the need to establish stability and security in the region.

According to a report, Iran's strong support for the legitimate government of Afghanistan and the need to increase cooperation and interaction between Tehran and Kabul in various political, economic and security fields. Mehr News Agency quoted Shamkhani also highlighted that "the United States has stepped up its insecurity in the West Asian region over the past year by the cowardly assassination of senior counterterrorism commanders Lieutenant General Qassem Soleimani and Abu Mahdi al-Muhandis." The "Islamic Republic of Iran is determined to take hard revenge on the perpetrators of this historic crime in order to prevent the continuance of terrorism and anti-security acts of the United States and its agents and to force them to leave the region," Shamkhani said. Mohib is in turnpersuaded Afghanistan's readiness to expand cooperation and interaction with Iran.

"The government and people of Afghanistan have always appreciated the in-depth, fruitful and support of Iran and Iransians," he said.

According to Mehr News Agency, President Berdimuhamedov had been signed by President Berdimuhamedov a resolution on enhanced power exports to Afghanistan's northern and eastern provinces at reduced rates. According to a media report, Turkmenistan will boost electricity exports through different routes to Afghanistan's northern and eastern provinces at reduced rates, says a media report.

KABUL - Turkmenistan will enhance the supply of electric power to Afghanistan's energy-deficient nation. The two countries are all poised to conclude additional agreements on operating contracts on electric power exports to the energy-deficient nation. The news agency reported on Monday that a resolution on enhanced power exports had been signed by President Berdimuhamedov.

In line with the document, Turkmenistan will boost electricity exports through different routes to Afghanistan's northern provinces at reduced rates. As its power-generating capacity continues to grow, Turkmenistan produced 147 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity in 2019 and 22.3 billion kilowatts in 2019 (Pajhwok)

Azerbaijan, Afghanistan Enjoy Great Potential for Developing Cooperation

BAKU - "There is great potential for developing cooperation between Azerbaijan and Afghanistan," said Azerbaijan's Foreign Minister JeyhunBayramov as he met with National Security Advisor of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan Hamdullah Mohib and Chief of Staff of the Afghan President Mohammad Sharif Kargar.

Minister Jeyhun Bayramov hailed the existing bilateral relations between Azerbaijan and Afghanistan, as well as cooperation within international organizations. Noting that Afghanistan also supported Azerbaijan's position based on international law, Bayramov stressed that the political support of the brotherly country was clearly demonstrated during the 44-day Patriotic War.

The minister noted that the Azerbaijani people (...) (More on P4-1-2).

Azerbaijan's Foreign Minister Jeyhun Bayramov met with Iran's Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif and Afghan President Mohammad Ashraf Ghani. This is the third meeting of the leaders in one week. The two discussed issues of mutual interest and security concerns relating to the region.

In a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry of Afghanistan, it was stated that “Our definition of the Taliban is that the Taliban have committed many terrorist acts.” The statement continued: “We cannot tolerate the Taliban as a terrorist organization.”

However, the Foreign Ministry artiticated that “Regardng recognition of the Taliban as a terrorist group, we have not removed the Taliban from our list of terrorist groups, in our laws,” a series of statements which have drawn the ire of the Afghan people.

In a statement issued by the Islamic Emirate, it praised its ouitzone, and mentioned that “such irresponsible and misinformed remarks by Iranian officials have the potential to harm the relationship between the friendly and neighboring countries.”

In response to Zarif’s classification of the Taliban as a terrorist group, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan stated that “The Islamic Emirate is not in any U.N. terrorist list and comments by Iran are unfounded.”

Arises (Mar. 22-Apr.20)

Dec 23, 2020 - You're so upbeat and opti- mistic by nature that it's difficult for you to recognize the facts. That's why you're making plans for what you're thinking today as you reflect on your personal strengths.

It's possible that you're taking a short-sighted attitude. You're making a differ- ence, even if it may not always be apparent. Continue on this path. Ultimately, you will see how worthwhile your journey is.

Taurus (Apr.21-May 20)

Dec 23, 2020 - This is bound to turn into a silly day for you. Things you're doing now will just be a waste of your time. Your best advice is to give up in the strange atrophied myth. Communication seems to be the key to everything you're doing, and it might not be easy to make use of it.

Dec 23, 2020 - You're moving more into the mainstream. Chinese herbs and supple- ments could just be what the New age doctor ordered.

Gemini (May 21-Jun20)

Dec 23, 2020 - There's a focus today on the way that you communicate with others. You're able to find ways to express yourself more directly.

Dec 23, 2020 - You have strong psychic vi- sions. Some people might say that you're seeing double.

Dec 23, 2020 - You're feeling full of spirit, but you're also feeling a bit of isolation. This is a great time to do something for yourself.

Cancer (Jun.21-Jul20)

Dec 23, 2020 - Your new project dominates today. You will likely be aware of it by the evening. That's because you're working extraordinarily hard lately and need to relax and wind down.

Dec 23, 2020 - It's hard to startle the group. Independence is for you to look for more attention and at- traction. You will be able to know what to discover. Do your best to satisfy everyone, making sure that your own needs are met.

Leo (Jul.21-Aug.21)

Dec 23, 2020 - You're usually very good at getting your ducks in a row when thingsanna around you.

Dec 23, 2020 - You will come under the influence of the stars this day. It's hard to go much further in this direction.

Dec 23, 2020 - Don’t fret about your lack of pro- ductivity. This is one day. Relax and have some fun.

The European Commission’s recent Digital Services Act (DSA) demonstrates an approach to addressing two major challenges: the governance of online platforms and the manipulation of the digital ecosystem, distorted price signals, and deep-seated market power in recent years. As they carry out their efforts, the key rules that need to be modified are "legality," which emphasizes the need for clear definitions adopted by democratic processes. Such definitions are missing in Tanzania, for example, and instead has rules hunting online content that "promotes anarchy," among other vague harms. It is not clear what content is and is not allowed, governments seek to maximize their power to restrict speech, and countries and companies struggle to enforce the rules fairly.

Another vital principle is "legitimation," which dictates that governments ensure that new measures are "specific for specific purposes," such as the rights of others, public health, and public order. The principle of "legitimation" thus demands that measures be tailored to fulfill these legitimate goals and be proportionate to the information being protected. No regulations should be adopted without seeking community-wide input and letting the public do the job.

A human rights-focused approach helps to prevent disproportionate consequences. In this respect, the European Union’s proposed regulation on preventing the spread of terrorism presents an example of "extremist content online" and "terrorist content." The European Union would require companies to remove all terrorist content from online platforms within two hours.

But companies themselves can and should apply rules that advance human rights, regardless of government regulation. Here, transparencies, due process, and accountability are essential.

For starters, social media companies must be much more forthcoming about how they regulate the information available on their platforms. Currently, much information is possible publicly, and providing legitimately sensitive information to regulators and independent entities through verifiable and transparent parameters could help the GNI to create sharing information about company responses to terrorism.

With this information, governments can ensure that intermediaries who remove sensitive information from online platforms, give appropriate resources and expertise (and, ideally, engaging experts and user rights advocates), should be tasked with providing guidance for and oversight of content moderation systems. At the same time, companies should be required to introduce mechanisms that give users greater control over what they see and share.

Ultimately, however, responsibility for moderating sensitive content should not fall solely on private companies. Instead, governments should put democratically accountable organs, like courts, in charge. At the same time, the Mandelbaum Disinformation Doctrine, while important, seeks to do that, providing an expedited process for judges to review potential "legal elements" of the information. That way, we can see the means of combating these difficult, politically sensitive determinations. By contrast, the country’s constitutional Court recently struck down a French hate speech law, in part because it circumvented the country’s court system.

No matter how clear the rules and how efficient the moderation systems, regulators and companies alike will need a solid legal backdrop. But that is only the first piece of the puzzle is dispute resolution and remediation. Companies should allow users to appeal content moderation decisions to independent ombudsmen. In this respect, the EU’s proposed regulation on transparency and redress is a positive development. It would allow media and independent bodies, with special consideration for vulnerable groups, to examine scores of content-regulation initiatives in more than a dozen countries. The final piece of the puzzle is dispute resolution and remediation. Companies should allow users to appeal content moderation decisions to independent ombudsmen. In this respect, the EU’s proposed regulation on transparency and redress is a positive development. It would allow media and independent bodies, with special consideration for vulnerable groups, to examine scores of content-regulation initiatives in more than a dozen countries. The best way to protect them is to allow for independent, in-country oversight of content.
