Over 1,000 Islamic Militants Killed in U.S. Strikes in Syria: Monitor

AMMAN - Three months of U.S.-led air strikes against armed groups in Libya, Iraq, and Syria have so far killed at least 1,000 Islamic state militants, a senior U.S. military official monitoring the campaign said on Wednesday.

Rami Abd al-Sharif, the head of the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, told reporters on Tuesday that more than 1,000 civilians and fighters died in strikes by the U.S.-led coalition against Islamic State targets in Syria in 2015.

The U.S.-led coalition, which is fighting Islamic State, has so far carried out more than 2,600 air strikes in Syria, according to a database on U.S. military operations in Syria and Iraq.

Strikes have been carried out in Syria, Iraq, and Libya to root out Islamic State fighters and and to protect civilians from attacks by the group.

The campaign has been ongoing since August 2014 and has targeted Islamic State fighters, their training camps, and their oil fields.

In Iraq, the U.S.-led coalition has helped Iraqi forces recapture the city of Mosul and withdraw from the city of Ramadi.

In Syria, the coalition has helped Syrian forces recapture the city of Raqqa and their oil fields in the north of the country.

The coalition has also helped Syrian forces recapture the town of Kobani in the north of Syria, which was held by Islamic State fighters for more than a year.

In Libya, the coalition has helped Libyan forces retake the city of Sirte from Islamic State fighters.

In conclusion, the U.S.-led coalition has been successful in its campaign against Islamic State fighters in Syria, Iraq, and Libya.

Shafiq Raslan, a senior military official monitoring the campaign, said on Wednesday that more than 1,000 Islamic state militants have been killed in air strikes by the U.S.-led coalition in Syria in 2015.

The coalition has been carrying out air strikes in Syria since August 2014 to root out Islamic State fighters and protect civilians from attacks by the group.

The campaign has been ongoing since August 2014 and has targeted Islamic State fighters, their training camps, and their oil fields.

In Iraq, the U.S.-led coalition has helped Iraqi forces recapture the city of Mosul and withdraw from the city of Ramadi.

In Syria, the coalition has helped Syrian forces recapture the city of Raqqa and their oil fields in the north of the country.

In Libya, the coalition has helped Libyan forces retake the city of Sirte from Islamic State fighters.

In conclusion, the U.S.-led coalition has been successful in its campaign against Islamic State fighters in Syria, Iraq, and Libya.