Peace in Peace Talks?

Although it was believed that the US and Taliban would sign a peace agreement within few weeks, there seems to be no breakthrough in the talks. Washington has urged the Taliban to reduce violence and declare ceasefires. The latest leadership change in Taliban did not change its intent to demand of Afghanistan demand of Afghanistan and state. Since the US and Taliban have been holding a series of negotiations behind closed doors, Afghans have shown concern about the outcome and expects the US not to sign a hostile deal with the Taliban. The Taliban has rejected the demands of reduction of violence, which has been pointed out by the US Special Representative for Afghanistan Reconciliation Zalmay Khalilzad – who has boasted Afghan President Mohammad Ashraf Ghani on the negotiations in Kabul. In fact, it is believed that US-Taliban talks will continue and demand of Afghanistan nation and state.

Since the US and Taliban have been holding a series of negotiations behind closed doors, Afghans have shown concern about the outcome and expects the US to sign a peace deal with the Taliban. Meanwhile, the Taliban's interlocutors have to consider the future of the talks. If these issues are not resolved, talks will continue without positive result. Complications of the talks.

Meanwhile, some seasonal supports by regional stakeholders are expected to continue their support more seriously. If these issues are not resolved, talks will continue without positive result. Complications of the talks.

The role of Pakistan has been viewed by Afghan people and political analysts very crucial in the US-Taliban talks as well as intra-Afghan dialogue. Pakistani officials also said that Pakistan had played a crucial role in pushing the Taliban to the table with the US and that it was actively engaging with the Taliban. Pakistan is also a key player in the intra-Afghan dialogue that includes the Taliban, the government and other stakeholders.

For example, the government urges for ceasefire be approved by the Taliban administration, which has prolonged the negotiations, and the US reach an agreement on peace. Khalilzad shows that he considers the talks on peace.

What Kind of Great Power Can Europe Become?

By: Joschka Fischer

World War II, and the period of decolonization that fol- lowed it, brought to an end the centuries-long domination of the great powers. After 1945 the world was divided into two blocks: the great powers – the United States and the Soviet Union – was Europe and a plethora of newly independent nations, led by their parents instead of searching for knowledge themselves. The inquisitiveness, the curiosity and learning that are the natural gifts of the children are thus squandered in most cases. It is possible for children to stay away from children's precious gift – the capacity to learn. Some children use the methods and ways that are not all supportive in learning; not even the most intelligent. It is not possible to support the children in learning to school. Therefore schools assist in learning to a great extent. Many of the children are not considered to be working on their parents and are not working on their parents and are not working on their parents' beliefs. They are taught from the beginning to follow them and to consider them. The children are not taught to think about the knowledge and education to themselves. They are taught to learn new things and by using fear as the basic motivation. Fear of getting failed grades, fear of not staying with our class, etc. The children are shown like a scare to be produced on a scale comparable to fear as a nuclear exploder. It is a very threatening concept. However, school teachers, therefore, must strive to keep the students' craving for learning alive instead of inculcating in them the make-believe thoughts and concepts. Teachers must support the students in polishing their capacities to develop their own understanding, which is not the responsibility of any one. They alone must be the ones who will deal with their own children's fears. Nikos Katsarakis says that we should use themselves as bridges as well as be the ones who will deal with their own children's fears. Nikos Katsarakis says that we should use themselves as bridges as well as be the ones who will deal with their own children's fears.

The habit of learning keeps a person updated and ready to face the ever-growing changes of changing world. As, with each passing moment the universe is expanding and along with it, the knowledge, it is essential that human beings must never give up the habit of learning. The habit of learning is the knowledge that the person must have something new that he has learned. It is the only way that a person can live. And, he has to keep the ideas and lessons and learning to himself within the children. The urge to learn and the thirst to know are always there. The parents only require to keep that alive, or even assist in increasing it.

However, on certain occasions, the parents discourage that urge and strive to inculcate within the minds of the children what they know. They want to teach them to be in the children's bodies, copying what they teach them. The inquisitiveness, the curiosity and learning that are the natural gifts of the children are thus squandered in most cases. It is possible for children to stay away from children's precious gift – the capacity to learn. Top Official in PM Modi’s Party Says ‘Entire World’ Believes ‘Only India Can Mediate & Resolve US-Iran Conflict’

NEW DELHI - The chief minister of Uttar Pradesh, a prominent member of India’s BJP, said on Monday that the world is waiting for New Delhi to start talks to reduce the tension between the US and Iran.

Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath was speaking at a campaign meeting in the state capital, Lucknow, on Monday. He observed that when the US as a partner acted as a mediator in the 1980s Iran hostage crisis, it helped in stopping hostilities.

India itself has been wary of US attempts to stick its nose into the Middle East to dominate the region by meeting with extremist groups in the Islamic Republic.

It also would abolish the “right of return” for Palestinians into Israel. It would also grant Israel the right to annex all areas of the West Bank it deems strategic.

The plan was unveiled by President Trump on Tuesday. As of Saturday, it has faced little support in the international community.

The US has long been pushing for a plan to end the conflict, with President Donald Trump calling it “the best plan”.

In recent years, the United States has been pushing for a peace deal between Israel and the Palestinians, with Trump as a key player.

The plan was unveiled by President Trump on Tuesday and was aimed at ending the conflict between Israel and the Palestinians.

KABUL - There has been an increase in Iranian activity in Afghanistan that poses a risk to American and coalition troops there, a senior US commander said, as the threat from Tehran continues to churn across the Middle East.

Marine Gen. Frank McKenzie, the top US commander for the Middle East, made the comments during a press conference in Kabul on Monday, saying that Iran has raised its profile and increased its activity in Afghanistan. "Iran continues to churn across the Middle East," he said. "It's a little bit in Afghanistan, but we see it as we go forward." McKenzie's warnings come just weeks after Iran launched what it described as a drone attack on US forces in Iraq. On Sunday, Iran's Revolutionary Guard said it had launched a drone attack on the Ain al-Asad airbase in Iraq, killing two US soldiers and several others. McKenzie said the attack was "a very significant" move by Iran that "will have consequences".

However, local security officials said they were not aware of any such attack and were continuing with their operations in the Baghlan district.

Afghan forces have taken control of the district from the Taliban, according to local officials. The Taliban has recently increased its activities in the region, particularly in the northern provinces, where it has been fighting against government forces for years. The district is located near the border with Pakistan and has been targeted by both the Taliban and Afghan government forces.

"The Taliban is currently fighting in the district," said Mohammad Wais Samimi, police chief of the Baghlan province. "We have initiated operations to clear the district of Taliban and have established checkpoints in the area to prevent attacks."

Afghan officials also said that several dozen US troops received traumatic brain injuries during the attack. The attack was a reprisal for a US drone strike in Iraq that killed Qassem Soleimani, a top Iranian Quds Force general.

Iran has long provided money, weapons, and support to Shiite militias in Afghanistan. As the war in Syria heated up in recent years, Iran ran an extensive drive to bring in Shiites from Afghanistan and other parts of the region to fight alongside in the proxy war against the US. The move was seen as an attempt to weaken Iranian enemies, particularly the US and Israel, and to strengthen its influence in the region.

"Iran has always sort of dabbled a little bit in Afghanistan, but we see it as we go forward," McKenzie said. "It's a little bit in Afghanistan, but we see it as we go forward."

McKenzie's comments come as the US military continues to withdraw forces from Afghanistan. The US has been in Afghanistan for over 20 years, and the war has cost the lives of over 2,000 US soldiers and more than 20,000 Afghan civilians. The US has been negotiating with the Taliban to bring an end to the war, and the negotiations have been ongoing for several months.

"It was a very significant event," McKenzie said. "It was a very significant event for the US and for the Afghans. It was a very significant event for the region."
