Moscow Talks Will Have No Impact on Peace Process: Govt

KABUL - The Afghan government has said the meeting between Afghan politicians and Taliban members in Moscow was a political one and that no one had any executive authority to forge agreements.

This comes a day after delegates attending the peace talks in Moscow issued a joint declaration in which they outlined a nine-point approach to promote “truth and Afghan” dialogue aimed at finding a political settlement to the conflict in the country.

“Moscow declaration will not have an impact on the peace process in Afghanistan,” the Presidential Palace (AIC) said in a statement on Thursday.

Meanwhile, a number of politicians have described the meeting in Moscow as a move to weaken the Afghan government. But they said the meeting between the Taliban and the Afghan politicians will help them come up with more coherent views regarding the peace process in future meetings.

This week’s Moscow meeting marked the peace process in future meetings.

Afghan Youths Want Bigger Role in Peace Process

KABUL - A day after a two-day meeting of Afghan politicians and Taliban representatives in Moscow, Afghan youths at a gathering in Kabul said they have not been given an active role in the process and that they are concerned about possible “agreements” in this regard which they believe will “affect the past 18 years’ achievements” including freedom of speech and women’s rights.

The two-day Moscow talks between Afghan politicians and Taliban wrapped up on Wednesday when the delegates issued a joint declaration that highlights nine key points they agreed on.

The activists defined peace as a dream of every Afghan but said that it should be sustainable and that the role of the young generation should not be underestimated in this process. According to participants to the event, Afghans are the main victims of the war. Therefore, the Taliban should talk with the people of Afghanistan, not the government.

“This meeting was held to honor the best youth in society and to discuss their role in the peace process. ‘The topic (peace) was also a technical committee with members of the government to shoot anyone who takes up arms against the government."

Addressing an event at the Ministry of Interior on Thursday, President Ashraf Ghani said that the Ira- nian government has started making landmines nine years ago, is the main supporter of people’s participation in solving conflicts, proving they are enemies.”

He added the presence of people from different political segments of Afghanistan at the ceremony of the Islamic Revolution of Iran showed that both the countries enjoyed good relationship.

He said the state to state relationship was improving and different committees from both sides were working on a broad range of issues.

He said neighbours had to live together and thus they faced similar threats, challenges and opportunities. He hailed the Iranian govern- ment’s stance on peace and reconciliation.
