NATO Does Not Believe in Military Solution for Afghan Conflict

BRUSSELS - Stoltenberg says Taliban has to understand that they will never win on the battlefield, so they have to come to the negotiating table and agree to a political solution.

ISLAMABAD - Pakistan is building a wall along its border with Afghanistan and wants U.S. President Donald Trump to help pay for it.

"It won't cost them [the U.S.] much," Foreign Minister Khawaja Muhammad Asif told the Bloomberg news agency. "The war is costing them much more." Only a fraction of the wall is completed because of money problems. But Asif said he still believes that it cannot achieve their goals through a military solution.

"We don't think that there is a military solution to the Afghan conflict and that the Taliban should realize that they cannot achieve their goals through war," he said.

"We believe that we need a strong Afghan force to be able to create the conditions for a political solution," he added.

"These T-walls and barriers have created problems every day to reach our destination," Kabul resident PeraiGul said.

"I don't think that road closures and barriers will bring security. They will only create heavy traffic and other problems for the people," Kabul resident Zahir said.
