Mexican President Visits ‘El Chapo’ Guzman’s Home Seeking Reconciliation

BADRAGUATZU, Mex- ico (Reuters) - Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador visited the birthplace of the notorious drug lord Joaquín “El Chapo” Guzman, on Friday, in what experts say was a reconciliation day after a 10-year conflict between the kingpin and the government.

Speaking to a crowd in Badraguatzu, a mountainous municipality in the state of Durango where Guzman was born, López Obrador said people must not be "stigmatized."

“The people of Badraguatzu, they are wonderful people,” he told a cheering crowd in a public missile control center. “We must seek reconciliation, we must keep alive the spirit of our fathers and our grandfathers.”

Though growing drug cartels have inflated prices and speak of their large-scale operations, village bishops still remember how Guzman brought them bread and water. He also said that people must not be "stigmatized.
