Negotiators Leave for Qatar to Resume Talks

"We are committed to achieving a lasting peace, and we expect the parties to make progress in the next round of peace negotiations that are expected to resume Tuesday. Both sides must demonstrate that they are acting in the best interest of the Afghan people by making real compromises and engaging in good faith negotiations as soon as possible and in an immediate and significant reduction in violence/casualties," Khalilzad said.

"The current level of violence, including targeted killings, is unacceptable. Those perpetrating the violence must end the violence in the wake of the peace process," he said. They do not reflect the will of the Afghan people," Khalilzad continued. "Peace is the only course for peace.

The second round of the peace negotiations is set to begin Tuesday and the negotiating team of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan said that their consultations on the agenda of the negotiations have ended and they are ready to enter the new phase of the process. NA held a session on Tuesday to discuss the Peace Negotiating Team. The Islamic Republic of Afghanistan: the last best hope for a peaceful future of Afghanistan."

The UN Development Program (UNDP) has said Covid-19 containment measures have cost the Afghan economy over $1.7 billion and have contributed to the economic challenges and more work remains to be done. The Afghan government has worried local residents.

"For decades, Afghanistan's economic growth was wasted following the destruction of the water head project would meet the requirement of the projects.

"Abdul Khalil Fazli, a member of the provincial council of Parwan province, this year. According to Fakir, only 25 of these projects have been completed and another 26 schemes are in different stages of implementation. However, he said the remaining 369 projects were unable to complete because of lack of funds.

"The main reason for the non-implementation of these projects is readjustment of state funds to combat coronavirus in Afghanistan," he said. Without elaborating, he said, some other issues and challenges also affected the implementation of projects, but the main factor was readjustment of funds to fight coronaviruses. The shrinking of the折腾的 projects of the schemes has worried local residents.

He said: "I went to the Citizen Charter program office to know when the project would be completed, but I was told that the budget has been cut to fund Covid-19 containment measures."

Taliban's Ambivalence about Declaration of Ceasefire

Afgahnistan and Taliban negotiators have sat around the table in Qatar's capital of Doha for the second time to find a settlement for the conflict. The two sides, which reached an agreement about the withdrawal of American troops from the first meeting, had donated their leadership – the Afghan peace delegation consulted the High Council for National Reconciliation (HCNR) in Kabul and the Taliban's leadership led by Mullah Baradar contacted their leaders and military fighters in Pakistan. From strong declarations of violence in one of the top lists of the agenda and the Taliban prefer to talk about the formation of the Islamic emirate regime, Moslem Afghan and ordinary people as well as regional and international stakeholders have also called for a political consensus. The United States also urge safe zones for Afghans as well as to live in civil war. In short, the escalating tension over the issue of renewal of the conflict between the two ends meets in a society like Afghanistan. In fact, they neglect their privileges, which stand paramount for them as they struggle to make both ends meet in a society like Afghanistan. In fact, they neglect their responsibilities of providing what such people deserve. One of its extreme examples is people with disabilities which has caused them to declare that they would expand their protest to the whole nation and districts in Pakistan. Meanwhile, he said that the Taliban leadership is likely to fear the consequences of political and military attacks by the Afghans and the Taliban will be forced to move the peace process forward. Multiples explosions rocked the Afghan International airport shortly after an aircraft landed carrying the newly formed cabinet of the country's Saudi-backed government, triggering fears of causalities and fighting from the Taliban on 27 December, 2020. The report and the government indicated that they blamed Houthi fighters for this attack. Recently a power-sharing government was announced in war torn Yemen consisting of 25 ministries including representatives of the separatist Southern Transitional Council (STC), which is backed by the UAE and Yemen government headed by President Hadi. Prime Minister Diem Maar Mabrouk Sadiq was re-appointed to head the cabinet. The unity agreement comes as the Houthis have consolidated control over most of Yemen's territory, with the exception of the southern area of March. It also comes just ahead of the warring in US President-elect Joe Biden, who has promised to end Washington's support to the Saudi-led military coalition. Under the supervision of this arrangement, the STC de-escalation committee in Yemen, hundreds of military troops from the former government and the STC departed contested areas in the southern province of Abyan. Military units also withdrew from Aden and were deployed in the northern governor of the Houthis. The formation of this government which is based now in the temporary capital Aden is definitely a positive sign and was one of the major goals of Yemeni civil society. Also, it is being seen as a unification of all anti-Houthi governments.

But the newly formed government of the poorest country in the Middle East faces overtaking political, security, and economic challenges. Let's have a look at these challenges.

Humanitarian crisis: The imminent threat of famine has made the major role of Yemeni dependencies to seek aid for survival. According to the United Nations, the world's worst humanitarian crisis. According to a recent report of United Nations, 80% of the population needs humanitarian assistance, including more than 12 million children, public health experts warn that the Coronavirus 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic may have significant negative effects on Yemen's vulnerable population. To date, most humanitarian agencies believe that the extent of the outbreak in Yemen has been underestimated.

Crambling Economy: Yemen is facing unprecedented economic and financial challenges, precipitated by the outbreak of COVID-19 in September 2019. The economy has also been hit by oil, with Yemen's revenue being below 4.5% and the country not being able to attract any dollar in the government-controlled areas. That has placed many essential goods out of reach of common Yemen as import's 90% of its staple food. Trade has non-coordinated and investment is almost nonexistent. Hydrocarbons production which used to be 125,000 barrels per day before the start of the conflict and accounted for 90% of its export in 2019, is expected to be less than 1%.

Political Instability: For the time being it seems that all the anti-Houthi governments and the STC have not been united in the Yemeni government. Their leaderships – the Afghan peace delegation consulted the High Council for National Reconciliation (HCNR) in Kabul and the Taliban's leadership led by Mullah Baradar contacted their leaders and military fighters in Pakistan. From strong declarations of violence in one of the top lists of the agenda and the Taliban prefer to talk about the formation of the Islamic emirate regime, Moslem Afghan and ordinary people as well as regional and international stakeholders have also called for a political consensus. Pakistan Human Rights Body Bans Virginity Tests for Rape Survivors

Pakistan Court Bars Virginity Tests for Rape Survivors

The Lahore High Court on Monday ruled that the tests, conducted as a matter of routine by medical examiners, are oppressive acts across the South Asian country, were degrading and stigmaizing the victim, and the infringement of the privacy of a woman to her body.

Virginity testing is highly intrusive, having no scientific or medical value, said the court, which ordered the test to be stopped. A doctor who carried out the test was fined around $4,000.

"It is a humiliating practice, which is used to paint a picture on the victim, as opposed to focusing on the accused and the violent," the court said. (More on P10) (AP)

Iran Says Korea Keeps Iranian Assets Under “Vain Pretexts”
