President of the American University of Afghanistan, Karim Karimi, Chief Executive Officer of the Afghanistan Parliament, Abdul Raufi Ibrahimi, and Sayed Hasan Azadi, former Afghan president and a former leader of the government's anti-Taliban forces, met in Washington, D.C. last week.

The meeting was attended by representatives from the United States government, including a high-ranking official from the State Department, and with the participation of Afghan protesters who have been calling for international intervention to protect Afghan civilians from the Taliban.

The Afghan representatives met with their counterparts from the United States to discuss the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan and the need for international support to bring an end to the violence.

During the meeting, the Afghan representatives highlighted the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan and the need for a comprehensive strategy to address the root causes of the conflict. They emphasized the importance of a political solution and the need for an inclusive dialogue to bring all stakeholders to the negotiating table.

The United States government expressed its commitment to support the Afghan government and its allies in the fight against terrorism and violent extremism. The representatives from the United States government also discussed the ongoing military operations and the need for a coordinated approach to combat the Taliban.

The Afghan representatives also emphasized the importance of international aid and assistance to support the Afghan government in its efforts to stabilize the country. They highlighted the importance of economic development and the need for a sustainable solution to the conflict.

The meeting concluded with a commitment to continue working closely with the Afghan government and its allies to bring an end to the violence and to ensure a secure and stable future for Afghanistan.

In conclusion, the meeting between the Afghan representatives and their counterparts from the United States government was an important step towards finding a comprehensive solution to the conflict in Afghanistan. The representatives expressed their appreciation for the support of the United States government and committed to continue working closely with them to bring an end to the violence and to ensure a secure and stable future for Afghanistan.