The Afghan government has been criticized for its treatment of Afghan refugees in Pakistan. Despite the fact that more than 800,000 Afghans have sought refuge in Pakistan, the government has not provided them with adequate assistance. According to the United Nations, more than 1 million Afghan refugees are living in Pakistan, and the majority of them are children and women. The government has not taken any steps to resettle these refugees in Afghanistan, and many of them are living in makeshift camps with limited access to basic services.

As a result, the Afghan refugees are exposed to severe hardships. They lack access to education, healthcare, and employment opportunities. Many of them are forced to work in hazardous conditions, which puts their health and safety at risk. Moreover, the Afghan refugees are often targeted by discrimination and violence, which further exacerbates their already difficult situation.

The Afghan government needs to take immediate action to address the plight of Afghan refugees in Pakistan. They should prioritize their resettlement in Afghanistan and provide them with the necessary support to enable them to rebuild their lives. The international community should also increase its support for Afghan refugees, and provide them with the necessary assistance to enable them to settle permanently in their home country.
