foreign policy.

As I told the UN Security Council less than two weeks ago, the presidential elections scheduled for 28 September will be a key moment in reaffirming the legitimacy of the political system and the outcome accepted," he said. All participants in the process - candidates, political parties, civil society organizations, national, regional and international partners, media, the election management bodies and voters - have an important role to play in order to ensure that the process is credible and transparent.

Afghanistan cannot afford a contested and protracted post-election crisis. The country's history is marked by brittle democratic and domestic legacies - and we cannot afford to harm the new president's ability to bring the Afghan people together in a meaningful and representative way.

In addition to fully supporting the efforts of Afghanistan's elected government bodies with technical guidance through the 28 September presidential elections, we will continue to work to support all efforts of Afghanistan, which are of utmost importance. Afghanistan has a long way to go. But with this historic opportunity, the full support of all stakeholders, I am confident that we are moving in the right direction.
