Dealing with the issue of mobility

By Dilawar Sherzai

Capitalism has always been controversial in its relation to human values. It is often accused of being the mainspring of the world's major economic systems. It is an economic system where the production and distribution of goods and services is determined by the interplay between supply and demand in the market. Capitalism can also be characterized by its emphasis on private property, competition, and profit maximization. It is an economic system where the market is the primary decision-making mechanism, and individuals and businesses are encouraged to pursue their own self-interest, leading to the accumulation of capital and the production of goods and services to meet the demands of the market. Capitalism is often associated with certain ethical values, which can vary depending on the specific cultural, social, or political context.
