1) In Policy Shift...

The shift away from a rebellion against the US and its Coalition partners, which was joined by the Taliban in 2001 following the invasion of the US, represents a significant milestone in the war in Afghanistan. However, it is unclear how long this ceasefire will last and how it will affect the peace process in the country.

The Taliban have announced a ceasefire, which was welcomed by the Afghan government and the international community. This ceasefire is seen as a stepping stone towards a political settlement in the country.

The Taliban have called for an end to the war, and the Afghan government and the Taliban have agreed to hold talks in Doha, Qatar. However, it remains to be seen whether these talks will result in a lasting peace in the country.

2) GCC Peace Process...

The Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) has stated that it supports a peaceful solution to the Afghan crisis and has called for a dialogue between the government and the Taliban. This is a significant development, as the GCC is a major regional power and its support can help bring the two sides to the negotiating table.

The GCC has called for a ceasefire and for both sides to respect the rights of civilians. It has also called for an end to the use of violence and for dialogue to be the only means of solving the conflict.

3) Peace Talks...

The peace process in Afghanistan is at a critical juncture. The recent ceasefire announced by the Taliban and the Afghan government is seen as a positive development, but it remains to be seen whether it will lead to a lasting peace in the country.
