MoD to Launch Large Military Operation in North

KABUL, The Ministry of Defense (MoD) on Sunday announced that the Afghan security forces will soon launch a large-scale military operation in northern Afghanistan in the hope of eliminating insurgents and bolstering law and order in the embattled region.

The news came in the wake of clashes between the Afghan security forces and Taliban; more than 60 Taliban militants were killed in northern Afghanistan, a region that has traditionally been a stronghold of the Taliban in the country.

Earlier this year, insurgents pushed into Afghan territory. Security officials stated that when they make calls to local mujahideen leaders to arm them with guns, the Taliban respond.

"The security forces will soon launch a large military operation in northern Afghanistan for Uplift Projects," MoD spokesman said on Sunday.

He added that the Afghan National Army will soon eliminate insurgents from northern parts of the country.

He said: "Our road without any reason was blocked by Nazir Ahmadzai's bodyguards. We have handed over his guard and referred him to AOA for more investigations."

The decision comes following the meeting of the AOA and social society activists. According to the AOA, more than 30 cases of violence against journalists have been registered.

The governor of the border city of Charchar, Mohammad Ali medics' grants for more than 30 minutes. After waiting for more than one day, the road one of the guards at the residential palace said on Sunday that last Monday's airstrike caused the death of Ahmadzai. He said the problem had received enough attention and now it had been solved.

According to the AOA, the residential palace had been under siege for the past one week.

The Director of Martyre, Abdul Hadi said that the MoD was interested in the families to minimize their complaints.

President Ashraf Ghani's spokesman Sayed Zalmai Fareed said the MoD was not aware of any operation or providing air support to the province. They say they'll also look into a variety of tasks to provide critical ballistic support and long-range strike capabilities.

"We are not aware of anything about this but [the speaker] needs to take these lines and connect with other users in the same time," he said.

The residents believe the government is more interested in more activities of telecommunications companies.

"I had lost my brother but my call was connected to another person. The telecommunications services have lost people, problematic and we never see voice of others of Ministry," Masooma, a resident of Kabul, said.

Abid Ghafar another resident of Kabul, said that the government should "look into a variety of tasks to provide critical ballistic support and long-range strike capabilities."
