Taliban’s Attitude towards Women’s Rights Stated in Moscow Meeting

The rights of the Afghan women are that their sons be not killed, their husbands should not be killed, they should not be forced out of their homes. These rights should be given to the women and the rights of children also should be given to them,” Anas K. Kuchel, an Afghan refugee in Moscow, said Sunday. He was cited as saying in the last Moscow meeting held between the Taliban and Afghan political figures. The Kuchel’s lack of civil knowledge of women’s rights and freedom is also the reason behind the Taliban’s ban on girls and women from going to schools.

Although the Taliban have claimed they moderated their attitude during their regime, which led to the violation of women’s rights, the situation of women in the country is not encouraging. The Taliban has not been able to implement their policies in the areas under their control.

Fearing picillos and Mark Thomas Patterson's book, Karen Decker, hosted more than 120 Afghan youth leaders from across the United States, particularly in the state of Minnesota, bringing together Afghan youth leaders and diaspora leaders from around the world. Providing opportunities for the diaspora to contribute to the rebuilding of Afghanistan is a critical step towards making this aspiration a reality. Understanding the grievances and challenges faced by members of the Afghan diaspora, who have seen their homes destroyed by war and conflict, is an important step in strengthening the many who are often overlooked in the pursuit of long-term and sustained peace throughout Afghanistan.

During the event, U.S. Ambassador John Bass encouraged the involvement of all Afghans in the dialogue surrounding the Afghan peace process. He emphasized the importance of everyone participating in the process and highlighted the progress made so far. He also underscored the need for Afghans to work together to achieve a lasting peace.

The Taliban have miserably failed to deliver on the promise of peace and security. They have continued to commit grave crimes against civilians and human rights. Despite the ongoing discussions about the return of the Taliban to the agreement, it is still unclear when or if this will happen.
