WASHINGTON - The United States is poised to store heavy arms in the Baltics, including advanced equipment, in response to Russian intervention in and Eastern European nations, a U.S. official said on Saturday.

The official, speaking on a condition of anonymity, said in a New York Times report that the Pentagon was poised to store battle tanks, including vehicles and other heavy weapons for the first time in the Baltics of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, to deter Russian aggression.

The Baltics are key NATO allies and have long been a strategic area for U.S. military interests. The move is part of a broader effort by the United States and its allies to reinforce security in the region, which has been under pressure from Russia.

U.S. Plans to Store Heavy Arms in Baltic, Eastern European Nato: Source

GWENDOLYN POTTER, Staff Writer

The United States is poised to store heavy arms in the Baltics, including advanced equipment, in response to Russian intervention in and Eastern European nations, a U.S. official said on Saturday.

The official, speaking on a condition of anonymity, said in a New York Times report that the Pentagon was poised to store battle tanks, including vehicles and other heavy weapons for the first time in the Baltics of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, to deter Russian aggression.

The Baltics are key NATO allies and have long been a strategic area for U.S. military interests. The move is part of a broader effort by the United States and its allies to reinforce security in the region, which has been under pressure from Russia.

U.S. Plans to Store Heavy Arms in Baltic, Eastern European Nato: Source

GWENDOLYN POTTER, Staff Writer

The United States is poised to store heavy arms in the Baltics, including advanced equipment, in response to Russian intervention in and Eastern European nations, a U.S. official said on Saturday.

The official, speaking on a condition of anonymity, said in a New York Times report that the Pentagon was poised to store battle tanks, including vehicles and other heavy weapons for the first time in the Baltics of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, to deter Russian aggression.

The Baltics are key NATO allies and have long been a strategic area for U.S. military interests. The move is part of a broader effort by the United States and its allies to reinforce security in the region, which has been under pressure from Russia.