Baglan to Bamyan Power Line Project Agreement Signed

The new transmission line will provide secure power to 10 provinces, including the volatile Talikaran District in Baglan province, and to central Bamyan province.

KABUL - An agreement between the Afghan General Directorate of Power (ADG) and the Afghan Development Bank (ADB) was signed on Sunday to extend a 330-megawatt power line from Dowlah Duz, district of northern Baglan province to central Bamyan province.

The development comes a month after tens of thousands of people protested in Kabul, demanding the government change the route of a multinational and multimillion dollar power project.

The protesters from the Hazara community wanted the government to route the power line through central provinces instead of Talikaran, on the outskirts of Kabul.

LONDON - UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani, today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

KABUL - UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.

UK Announces 15 Million for Democracy, Liberty in Afghanistan

UK Minister of State for International Development, Rory Stewart, and Afghan President Ashraf Ghani today signed in London an agreement to boost UK aid to Afghanistan. The agreement follows on from the visit of the Afghan President to London in March and a meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London.

The agreement commits the new British Government to provide £15 million (over five years) of additional support for the Afghan national army. The UK will also provide £30 million (over five years) for the Afghan army to support national development.

The deal is part of a growing partnership between the UK and Afghanistan. Over the next five years the UK has committed £1.5 billion in development assistance.