WASHINGTON - The United States is working to expand areas of practical cooperation with China while seeking to resolve differences with the country, which is a top priority for the Biden administration.

On Thursday, President Joe Biden met with Chinese President Xi Jinping in a look-at-the-camera summit at the G-7 leaders' meeting. The White House said the two leaders discussed a wide range of issues, including climate change, cybersecurity, and the ongoing conflict in Ukraine.

Biden said he had made it clear to Xi that the United States is committed to a strong, prosperous, and peaceful China. He also told him that the United States values China as a rising power and wants to work with China to address global challenges.

Meanwhile, Xi said that China and the United States should respect each other's core interests and respect each other's ways of life. He also said that China and the United States should focus on practical cooperation and reduce differences in areas such as trade, investment, and technology.

Trade and investment were key topics of discussion during the summit. The two leaders agreed to continue efforts to increase two-way trade and investment, including through the US-China Comprehensive Outline for Economic and Financial Relations. They also discussed the importance of ensuring a secure and transparent international financial system and the need to address global imbalances.

In conclusion, President Biden and President Xi said that they look forward to continued dialogue and cooperation to address the challenges facing the world.

Leadership

Economic Relations

Global Challenges

U.S.-China Cooperation

Security Issues

Conclusion