Optimism and pessimism over Pakistan and Qatar peace process

By: Mohammad Zahir Akbari

The “Lahore Peace Conference” kicked off in Lahore, a Pakistan city that hosted meetings like this on Saturday where many Afghan politicians have attended. In the Lahore conference which was attended by about 100 delegates, including members from about 40 countries, with Hafizullah Aman Akbari, the head of the Afghan negotiating team, Dr. Amin Karim, the former Afghan Minister of Education, and other Afghan and international representatives. The conference took place in the Pakistan capital, Kabul, on Sunday, the day after the killing in a mosque in Kabul.

The conference included a number of sessions and discussions on various topics, including the need for peace and dialogue in Afghanistan, the importance of promoting cultural tolerance, and the role of the international community in supporting the Afghan peace process. The conference also included a statement of principles for promoting peace and dialogue, which was endorsed by all the participants.

The conference was attended by representatives from a number of countries, including Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iran, Russia, China, and the United States. The conference also included a number of meetings and discussions with Afghan leaders and officials, including the Afghan President, Ashraf Ghani, and other high-ranking officials.

The conference was widely supported by the international community, and it was seen as an important step towards promoting peace and dialogue in Afghanistan. The conference was also widely covered by the media, and it was seen as a positive development in the Afghan peace process.

The conference included discussions on a number of important issues, including the need for a comprehensive and inclusive peace process, the importance of promoting political solutions, and the role of the international community in supporting the Afghan peace process.

The conference was also seen as an important step towards promoting cultural tolerance and understanding, and it was widely seen as a positive development in the Afghan peace process.

The conference was held in the presence of representatives from a number of countries, including Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iran, Russia, China, and the United States. The conference also included a number of meetings and discussions with Afghan leaders and officials, including the Afghan President, Ashraf Ghani, and other high-ranking officials.

The conference was widely supported by the international community, and it was seen as an important step towards promoting peace and dialogue in Afghanistan. The conference was also widely covered by the media, and it was seen as a positive development in the Afghan peace process.

The conference included discussions on a number of important issues, including the need for a comprehensive and inclusive peace process, the importance of promoting political solutions, and the role of the international community in supporting the Afghan peace process.

The conference was also seen as an important step towards promoting cultural tolerance and understanding, and it was widely seen as a positive development in the Afghan peace process.