KABUL - Ministry of Communication and Information Technology (MCIT) on Thursday signed Real Time Data Management System to monitor collection of the 10 percent taxes from telecom services.

The contract that valued $11.1 million was signed at the Presidential Palace between Communication and Information Technology Minister Shahrzad Aryabati and representative of Bustos Group, an American company.

Aryabati said the contract is for 13 months of which in the first four months the company will provide the condition for managing and overseeing the gathering of the 10 percent telecom services taxes.

Mujahid confirmed the pause, "It was a question from the people that where the 10 percent taxes go. Following the activation of this system, the question will be answered. This system will record every Afghan, the money goes to government’s treasury," he explained.

However, Ren said there was no cooperation between the two is "in line with" international law and related resolutions passed by the UN Security Council, said ministry spokesman Ren Guoqiang. A French court ordered that the child be cared for, but the state did not carry out the order.

Because of that failure, the court ruled, the child "spent months in a migrant camp in Calais in 2010. The Afghan, identified as Jamil Khan, who was 12 at the time, was living in the camp when the government ordered its demolition. A French court ordered that the child be cared for, but the state did not carry out the order.

Because of that failure, the court ruled, the child "spent months in a migrant camp in Calais in 2010. The Afghan, identified as Jamil Khan, who was 12 at the time, was living in the camp when the government ordered its demolition. A French court ordered that the child be cared for, but the state did not carry out the order.

Because of that failure, the court ruled, the child “spent months in a migrant camp in Calais in 2010. The Afghan, identified as Jamil Khan, who was 12 at the time, was living in the camp when the government ordered its demolition. A French court ordered that the child be cared for, but the state did not carry out the order. Because of that failure, the court ruled, the child “spent months in a migrant camp in Calais in 2010. The Afghan, identified as Jamil Khan, who was 12 at the time, was living in the camp when the government ordered its demolition. A French court ordered that the child be cared for, but the state did not carry out the order.