The Afghan security forces are currently fighting alongside foreign militants, including those of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), in the Afghan city of Kandahar. The US military has been training and equipping the Afghan security forces to combat ISIL, which has been expanding its influence in the region. The Afghan government has expressed its commitment to fighting terrorism and has sought international support to achieve its objectives.

The Afghan government has been engaging in peace talks with the Taliban, seeking a political solution to the conflict. The Taliban have been active in Afghanistan, controlling large swaths of territory and launching attacks against government forces and civilians. The Afghan government has been under pressure to address the security crisis and has sought assistance from the international community to support its efforts.

The Afghan government has been facing challenges in improving political stability and governance. Corruption, economic instability, and lack of political inclusion have been major issues. The government has been working to address these issues, but progress has been slow. The Afghan government has sought international support to address these challenges and improve the country's situation.