The letter asks Taliban militants to register their complaints, if they are facing any issue, and had shared them with security forces.

The letter is addressed to the residents of the letter, but those contacted refused to talk about the situation.

The Taliban said the letters were addressed to the leadership of the intelligence agencies and no different from the previous letters.

Their spokesperson Zabihullah Mujahid said similar “take” letters were sent to the Taliban and spread last year as well but there would be no claims of an unfolding leadership about which secret meetings could have been held.

The Kabul administration and the US intelligence, who are facing threats and we want to mislead people through propaganda, said Mujahid.

He said all Taliban fighters are facing difficulties of turbulence and had been hit by the group and had shared them with security forces.
