Government should Take Stern Action against Power Abusers

By Muhammad Rasool Shafqat

March 07, 2015

The situation, there seems to be efforts underway to end be a deal with Taliban and making them agree to lay down arms. Not only the government of the Taliban, but also other states in the region have a vested interest in ending the war. International pressure and threats of economic sanctions has forced the Taliban to engage in negotiations. However, the victory of the Taliban in the war is not inevitable. The situation is complex and there are many factors at play.

International relations, alliances, and the internal politics of Afghanistan are all important considerations.

The situation is not helped by the fact that the government and the Taliban are not always on the same page. The government wants to negotiate, but the Taliban may not agree. The Taliban may want to negotiate, but the government may not want to deal with them.

In the end, the only solution to the war in Afghanistan is a political settlement. This will require a willingness on the part of the government and the Taliban to compromise and find a way to end the violence.

The United States has been trying to negotiate a peace deal with the Taliban for many years. However, these efforts have not been successful. The Taliban have been unwilling to compromise and have been unwilling to accept a political settlement. This has led to a situation where the United States has been forced to consider other options.

One option is to continue to support the Afghan government in their efforts to end the war. This could include providing additional military support, as well as economic assistance.

Another option is to consider a military intervention. This could involve the use of air strikes or military operations to disrupt the Taliban’s ability to carry out attacks.

Ultimately, the only solution to the war in Afghanistan is a political settlement. This will require a willingness on the part of the government and the Taliban to compromise and find a way to end the violence.