U.S. Aid Cut Will Not Impact Afghan Sectors: President Ghani

KABUL - Afghan President Mohammad Ashraf Ghani said on Tuesday that a $1 billion-U.S. dollar reduction in economic aid to Afghanistan would not have an impact on the country’s key sectors and departments.

"Government has always had plans for prudential circumstances. We had also basic plans for the unexpected situations," Ghani said in a televised speech.

"I can assure you that the reduction in U.S. assistance will not have direct impact on our departments and sectors. We will free the vacuum with the help of alternative resources," he said.

On Feb. 18, the Afghan election commission declared Ghani winner of the presidential election nearly five months after the voting, but his rival Abdullah Abdullah disputed the result.

Both Ghani and Abdullah took oath as president of Afghanistan on March 9. After talks with Afghan leaders during a visit to Afghanistan on Monday, U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said the United States is reducing assistance by 1 billion U.S. dollars to Afghanistan this year due to the Afghan government’s failure to form an inclusive government.

During the meetings in Kabul, Pompeo reportedly failed to make compromise between Ghani and Abdullah to form a unity government. However, Ghani noted that the United States did not suspend its assistance to Afghanistan but had made providing the assistance conditional.

"We will continue our efforts to resolve the issue through negotiations," Ghani said.

Following his meeting with Afghan leaders in Kabul on Monday, Pompeo had a brief stay in Dubai, Qatar, where he met with the Qatari Foreign minister. The Ministry of Public Health has so far recorded 42 positive cases of coronavirus across Afghanistan. Meanwhile, Afghanistan also showed that the disease could spread among 80 percent of the population of Afghanistan.

Ms. Pompeo further added that the United States did not suspend its assistance to Afghanistan but had made providing the assistance conditional.

The Afghan health minister added that the United States did not suspend its assistance to Afghanistan but had made providing the assistance conditional.
