BAGHDAD - United Nations special envoy for Iraq Martin Griffiths arrived in Baghdad on Thursday for talks with senior officials onwards. The trip took place as escalating cross-border hostility continues to rise. Griffiths visited the Iraqi capital in March, 2015, which was traveling with World Bank Chief Jon Yong Kim and Iraqi Finance Minister Al-Abbass Salem during his trip to Baghdad, where he called for more to be done in the region and visited some of the 1.2 million refugees who have fled conflict in Syria, the economic crisis, war and other conflict in the region, including in Iraq. His visit comes on the heels of the latest in a string of meetings between Griffiths and various stakeholders in the region, as the UN continues to urge all parties to the conflict to engage in dialogue and take steps to de-escalate the situation.

The UN Chief Ban Ki Moon in Baghdad for Talks

The UN chief, Ban Ki Moon, who arrived in Baghdad on Thursday afternoon, met with Iraqi Prime Minister Haider Al-Abadi and other top officials. The visit comes amid growing tensions between Iraq and Iran, as well as ongoing violence in the country. Moon said he is concerned about the situation in Iraq and called on all parties to work towards peace and stability in the region.

The visit is part of Moon's trip to the Middle East, which also includes visits to other countries in the region. Moon's trip is aimed at discussing the situation in Iraq and other issues in the region with top officials. He is expected to meet with leaders from other countries in the region during his visit.

On Thursday, the Iraqi government announced that it had expelled the UN special envoy for Iraq, Martin Griffiths, from the country. The government said that Griffiths had violated its sovereignty by engaging in activities that were not in line with his mandate. The announcement came amid tensions between Iraq and the UN, which has been criticized for its role in the country's affairs.

The UN chief has been in Iraq to discuss the ongoing conflict and the need for peace. He has called on all parties to work towards a political solution to the crisis, and has urged the international community to support the government's efforts.
