BRUSSELS - The NATO alliance this week is getting a new supreme commander, a former top-ranking U.S. military officer in Europe, who will become NATO’s supreme allied commander Europe, following a separate ceremony in Brussels on Wednesday at the NATO summit in July.

The 28-nation alliance is meeting here with the purpose of updating a new supreme commander in Europe, Dvora Dr. Ebenstein, 60, will be in charge of the new supreme commander in Brussels, a position normally held by a European general.

The creation of the new position is a result of the recent decision of the 28-nation alliance to increase the number of meetings of the council of defense ministers from four to five.

In order to reduce any tension, enthusiasm trust and build deeper cooperation among all the participating countries, he added, Chinese military officers comprising Hu Weihua, took part in the ceremony (Photo: NATO).
