Kerry Heading to Middle East This Week: State Department

Washington - U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry will travel to Saudi Arabia and Pakistan this week to discuss Middle Eastern affairs, a spokesman said on Monday.

Kerry will arrive in Riyadh on Wednesday and Thursday to discuss regional security issues, State Department spokesman John Kirby said.

On Friday, Kerry will travel to Pakistan to discuss the situation in Afghanistan and the broader U.S.-Pakistan relationship, according to Kirby.

The outreach is a world tour mostly in May and June, which Beijing has organized as a series of diplomatic initiatives, mostly in May and June, according to Kirby.

Kerry's trip will begin with a visit to South Korea and then proceed to Japan. In Seoul, he will meet with South Korean President Park Geun-hye, who is expected to raise North Korea's nuclear test and missile launches, according to Kirby.

In Tokyo, Kerry will meet with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and discuss regional security issues, including North Korea's nuclear and missile programs.

Kerry will also travel to India, where he will meet with Prime Minister Narendra Modi and discuss bilateral and regional issues, including Afghanistan and the South China Sea.

Later in the week, Kerry will travel to Pakistan, where he will meet with Pakistani Prime Minister Imran Khan and discuss the situation in Afghanistan and the broader U.S.-Pakistan relationship.

Kerry's trip follows a series of high-level visits to the region by other senior U.S. officials, including Secretary of Defense Mark Esper and Secretary of Homeland Security Chad Wolf.
