In recent years, Russia has emerged as an influential power broker in Afghanistan, following a long and costly war that saw the Taliban take control of the country. This war has been described as a “race to the bottom” for its economic and social implications.

However, it is important to note that the implications of the war extend far beyond just the economic impact. The displacement of people from their homes and the loss of livelihoods have had a significant impact on the population, particularly in the rural areas of Afghanistan. This displacement has led to an increase in human rights violations, including the displacement of people from their homes and the loss of livelihoods. In the face of this, it is important to recognize the importance of international cooperation and support in addressing the challenges faced by people in Afghanistan.
