US Efforts to Shore up Afghan Economy Foundering, Watchdog Finds

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense 2020 defense budget request is already facing opposition from the U.S. Congress. The request is expected to be vetoed by President Donald Trump. The move comes after the White House announced plans to cut funding for the Department of Defense. The cuts would affect both the military and civilian personnel of the department.

The move comes as the Trump administration is looking for ways to cut spending in the Department of Defense. The administration has said it plans to cut spending in the military by $1.2 trillion over the next decade. The cuts would affect both the military and civilian personnel of the department.
