Unmitigated Suffering of Individuals Not Poignant?

By: Mohammad Zahir Akbari

Last year, after persistent public complaints and criticisms about air pollution in Kabul, the government had established the High Commission for Combating Air Pollution. The commission was comprised of 13 government agencies such as agriculture, municipalities and independent government departments to reduce Kabul’s air pollution over the next four years. This commission conducted a survey and overestimated the air pollution and claimed that over 70% of pollutants in Kabul were generated from high-tonnage vehicles. The commission was supposed to carry out fundamental plans for air pollution in Kabul but the fact showed that the commission had laid all the blame on high-tonnage vehicles while other sources for air pollution such as high gas prices, irregularities in the supply of electricity, and unemployment in the agriculture sector, could have a significant impact on air pollution. Prices in Kabul markets have already reached around 15 dollars, power outage are frequent in recent days, and climatic conditions are extremely cold, the market for buying and selling of unprocessed coal became hot as the streets and roads of Kabul are full of high-tonnage coal trucks. Therefore, it seems that the Kabul citizens are not going to experience different winter comparing to previous years when Kabul had gotten the poisonous air pollution. The most important thing that the government, the High Commission for Combating Air Pollution, and all other relevant government agencies had to do so far was to provide alternative coal fuel for the citizens. The basic alternative fuel is to provide continuous electricity and distribute cheap gas to citizens but this has not been done yet. From now on, the people have both electricity shortages and high gas price problems. Given these issues a large number of people have already purchased unprocessed coal fuel for heating because in the winter seasons.

The people cannot afford to buy another type of fuel once they all have sold their means for the coming winter. Therefore, it is a high time for the government and for the High Commission of the Combating Air Pollution to declare their alternative plans as they were supposed to do so. However, they do not seem to devise something that can be realized because recently, Amrullah Saleh, the first vice president, warned the legal authorities to blame the owners of 603 high-rise buildings installs filters.

Alternative energy solutions are the first of the vice president’s advisers are adamant. We should not forget that the share of 603 buildings out of nearly 7 million buildings whose owners did not hesitate to install filters in air-pollution. These types of small tactics were also applied in past years but did not produce satisfactory result. For example, in past years many high-rise buildings, public baths, factories, businesses and so on were prohibited from using coal fuel without filter but did not bring any visible results. However, the reduction of air pollution in Kabul needs to alternative fuel. For example, this is not very difficult for government to reduce the price of gas for at least three months so that citizens use low cost clean energy. Given the levels of poverty and unemployment in the country, people are compelled to use coal fuel or other polluting energies when there is no other alternative for them. The next point which requires special attention of government is simultaneity of policies. In the last few years, the government pushed with the protect to have a check whether others are following its trend or not. Although the government’s policy is to make the economy more and more and more controversial with the demolished nations; and they also have the right to decide their own fates in their land and social life.

The inherent dignity of mankind, which makes practicing American nationalism to a forward-looking approach, which means that it acquires its appeal from what it wants to achieve and how it achieved what it has achieved in the past. The concept of 'great history' and 'grand traditions', are mostly life in the nations that need to have glorious pasts but now they suffer from instability and disorder. However, as the citizens are still in the dark about their glorious past the present, they mostly see what they will be able to acquire in future, instead of looking at achievements in past.

The American nationalism has always played a role in determining the US foreign policy. It’s attribute of considering the US foreign policies and interest and better than others. The US has always taken the so-called responsibility of disseminating the liberal and democratic values to the other parts of the world. As a result, the America has tried to create a positive image of itself in foreign policy after World War II, when it put itself on the course to rule the world through the international mechanisms and organizations to implement the universal principles of democracy and liberal. The formation of United Nations and the international financial and economic organizations and the interference within the policies of other nations all were for the sake of the claimed spread of democracy. Later, the disintegration of USSR, further provided an opportunity to American nationalism to play a dominant role within foreign policy initiatives. In fact, the Soviet disintegration was considered as the ultimate success of American nationalism to implement its principles of socialism and authoritarianism. This concept justified the interference within the politics of other nations and the excessive intervention within Central Asia.

The next condition for being able to promote American nationalism is that those boards which were 'backward', 'fundamentalists' and 'extremists', Afghanistan being the prime example. Moreover, the same notion justified the US war in Iraq, where as per the US version, the democracy was in danger and the spread of terrorism was prevalent. The US nationalism superintendence of its liberal and democratic principle and democratic values in all parts of the world. Today, US is present militarily in Middle East, in Indian and Pakistan, in Europe, and Africa, in the Middle East. Australia has been with the protect to have a check whether others are following its trend or not. Although the government’s policy is to make the economy more and more and more controversial with the demolished nations; and they also have the right to decide their own fates in their land and social life.

The inherent dignity of mankind, which makes practicing American nationalism to a forward-looking approach, which means that it acquires its appeal from what it wants to achieve and how it achieved what it has achieved in the past.
