KABUL - Fighters loyal to al-Qaeda have taken on a more active role supplying fuel for the Taliban during the current offensive against government positions while the position of Daesh in the country “has distinctly waned,” UN experts said in a report circulated Friday.

The experts said the Afghan government and several other countries estimate that there are about 45,000 opposition fighters in Afghanistan and between 20 and 25 percent are foreigners. These “bad actors … mutual interest with each other and presented a significant and rising terrorism challenge not only for the country but also for the international community,” the experts quoted several unnamed officials as saying.

Mujadidi Wants ICC Moved Over Kunduz Incident

KABUL - Former president Hamid Karzai, ex-warlord Abdul Rasul, on Saturday said the International Criminal Court (ICC) should be moved over the last year’s deadly civilians’ deaths in northern Kunduz province.

Last Thursday, Afghan and US security forces jointly conducted an air strike in Kunduz district area of Kunduz province during an operation against rebels. Besides six militants, the air raid also resulted in civilian casualties, including women and children.

“... Children that have violated the principles of non-refoulement. It is not acceptable for them to be returned, and those with a tragic history has become emblematic of Pakistan’s treatment of Afghan refugees,” he added.
