In Afghanistan, the issue of presidential elections has not yet been completely resolved. The Afghan government has announced a six-month window for elections to be held, but the Taliban have rejected the date set by the Independent Election Commission (IEC). This comes after a report Tuesday morning, which said the US was pushing for the elections to be held by the end of this year.

The US has repeatedly called for the elections to be held, but the Taliban have rejected the date set by the IEC. The US has said that the elections are essential for the stabilization of the country.

On the issue of last week’s meeting in Moscow, US national security advisor Robert O’Brien said that the Taliban were not on board with the new government in Afghanistan.

However, the Afghan government immediately rejected the allegations and President Ashraf Ghani’s spokesman was quick to clarify that the government is holding presidential elections as per the Afghan constitution and the date determined by the Independent Election Commission.

Ghani’s spokesman, Hanen Chakhzoori, told a press conference in Kabul that the government is in a process and that all other proposals about the elections in our constitution is simply not acceptable.

Fani Faizi, a presidential advisor, also immediately took to Twitter and said the Afghan government is holding the 2019 presidential vote which is not just a presidential election but a parliamentary election as well.

The president also called on the Afghan people to continue supporting the government for the sake of peace and development.

The battle of political parties and their allies continues. The political government’s term will end and that it is better that it is in favor of the constitution which is accepted by both for the sake of our people. The political parties of the country should not be subject to any political or ethnic-oriented issue because of peace.

Mohammad Nabi, the head of the Pakistan National Congress, has said that the order of the political parties on Monday commented that the political government’s term will end and that it is better that it is in favor of the constitution which is accepted by both for the sake of our people.
