HELIK. US President Barack Obama vowed on Sunday to step up efforts to eliminate Islamic State in Syria and Syrian government are taking actions to put Islamic State out of business.

Speaking at a G20 leaders summit in Turkey, Obama described the killings in Paris by Islamic State as an attack on the civilized world and said the United States would work with France to hunt down those responsible. The two-day summit brings leaders of Islamic States into Syria, where a 4:1/2-year conflict has transformed Islamic State into a global security threat and sparked Europe’s largest migration flows since World War Two.
