Kabul Police Failed to Foul Attack on Mosque: Danish

KABUL - President Ashraf Ghani's second VP Mohammad Sarwar Danish on Monday accused the Kabul police headquarters and building contractor of allowing Monday’s deadly bombing at a Keya Mosque in Bagh-e-Quln in Kabul. He also called for a full inquiry into the incident, which left dozens of the civilians dead and wounded.

Talking on the motives behind such attacks, while top Afghan government officials, President Ashraf Ghani and Chief Executive Officer Abdullah Abdullah, tried to formulate the attack on the Kabul mosque a deliberate attempt by terrorists to eliminate sectarian violence in Afghanistan. Danish had been speaking at the swearing-in ceremony of the new commission for electoral boards. “Such incidents, and the unpreventable presence of security forces at Bagh-e-Quln mosque yesterday was a clear indication of negligence which needs to be investigated and there should be clear answers to the questions the people have,” said Danish.

The terrorists and Daesh by conducting such inhumane attacks on innocents want to target our integration and unity, through such acts (terrorism) they want to spread sectarianism of division,” said Danish at the ceremony which was conducted by Danish in an attack against the people of Afghanistan, it was an act of terrorism and we strongly condemn such attacks against the people of Afghanistan,” said Abdul Lahu.

Meanwhile, the ministry of interior has said that security officials of PDs have been succeeded. The statements come a day after a suicide bomber strapped explosives inside a crowd of people in Bagh-e-Quln mosque in Kabul killing at least 32 people and wounded dozens of others.

“Terrorism or our enemies, security, all sanctions, safe havens and support to such terrorist groups will be definitely met with a strong response,” said Danish.

He said that the Indian government and people stand with Afghan police as they fight against terrorism and strongly condemn all such terrorist attacks.

A Sinn FEIN attack on a Shia shrine in Kabul.

Bamyan Women Complain About Lack of Jobs

BAMYAN CITY - Women in central Bamyan province say they are interested and have the ability to work but there are no jobs for them so they have no income. Though women’s affairs have improved in Bamyan over the past 15 years, but some problems facing women.

Poverty, working as farm workers and selling firewood for household needs to the whiteheads have a number of male and women in the central province.

Taima, a housewife who has a small bazaar in a small town in Bamyan, said she works hard to earn 200 afghani every day to buy food and other basic necessities for her home.

“I work in a potato farm and sell it. I have to find 300 afghani at least every day,” she added.

Many other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“The labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.

KABUL - Afghan women are protesting their lack of jobs and the government’s failure to provide them job opportunities.

Zahra Lali, who owns a small shop in Bamyan city, said her business was very weak and her products were rarely sold.

The number of foreign tourists traveling to Bamyan province declined and the increased insecurity on the Kabul-Bamyan highway has negatively impacted handicraft sales, said Lali.

The government will have to pay attention to women’s problems in Bamyan.

A number of educated girls and women in Bamyan also complained about unemployment.

Maryama, a resident of the Pajhwok Afghan News, said she was working as a farm worker, “I work hard for our family needs, but I don’t meet our family needs, our children need education, but we face the problem,” she added.

Many women also other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“Labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.

Bamyan Women Complain about Lack of Jobs

BAMYAN - Afghanistan’s women are protesting their lack of jobs and the government’s failure to provide them job opportunities.

Zahra Lali, a housewife who has a small bazaar in a small town in Bamyan, said she works hard to earn 200 afghani every day to buy food and other basic necessities for her home.

“I work in a potato farm and sell it. I have to find 300 afghani at least every day,” she added.

Many other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“The labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.

KABUL - Afghan women are protesting their lack of jobs and the government’s failure to provide them job opportunities.

Zahra Lali, who owns a small shop in Bamyan city, said her business was very weak and her products were rarely sold.

The number of foreign tourists traveling to Bamyan province declined and the increased insecurity on the Kabul-Bamyan highway has negatively impacted handicraft sales, said Lali.

The government will have to pay attention to women’s problems in Bamyan.

A number of educated girls and women in Bamyan also complained about unemployment.

Maryama, a resident of the Pajhwok Afghan News, said she was working as a farm worker, “I work hard for our family needs, but I don’t meet our family needs, our children need education, but we face the problem,” she added.

Many women also other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“The labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.

Bamyan Women Complain about Lack of Jobs

BAMYAN - Afghanistan’s women are protesting their lack of jobs and the government’s failure to provide them job opportunities.

Zahra Lali, a housewife who has a small bazaar in a small town in Bamyan, said she works hard to earn 200 afghani every day to buy food and other basic necessities for her home.

“I work in a potato farm and sell it. I have to find 300 afghani at least every day,” she added.

Many other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“The labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.

KABUL - Afghan women are protesting their lack of jobs and the government’s failure to provide them job opportunities.

Zahra Lali, who owns a small shop in Bamyan city, said her business was very weak and her products were rarely sold.

The number of foreign tourists traveling to Bamyan province declined and the increased insecurity on the Kabul-Bamyan highway has negatively impacted handicraft sales, said Lali.

The government will have to pay attention to women’s problems in Bamyan.

A number of educated girls and women in Bamyan also complained about unemployment.

Maryama, a resident of the Pajhwok Afghan News, said she was working as a farm worker, “I work hard for our family needs, but I don’t meet our family needs, our children need education, but we face the problem,” she added.

Many women also other women also work in the market but such opportunities are not permanent or long term, she said.

“The labor is hard for women, they should work in tailoring, sewing, selling, offices and sales, but these opportunities are unavailable to us so we must work in labor to earn something,” she added.