The government said it would continue to work on the new building for Kabul international airport.

The spokesman, Munir Farhad, told Pajhwok Afghan News that Washington would travel to Kabul after the November 8 vote.

2 Senate Critics: Mustafaizada, also criticized the increase in fuel prices and saw them as a sign that the government is playing with people’s fate. She said the increased fuel prices could have a large impact on the prices of essential items, including mattresses.

About electricity distribution in Kabul, she said no balance was ever shown between the interests of the government and the Kabul residents.

A second war lawmaker also complained about high fuel prices and the lack of essential goods in the capital.
