The Anniversary of Sectarianism Victims

The martyrdom anniversary of Shokhah Tahsini, a 13-year-old girl, was held on Friday in Kabul. Her death galvanized the nation and prompted a nationwide demonstration last year. The victims from different ethnic communities in the country, including Tahsini, are being remembered and laid to rest with the ones in a sea of tears by the innocent civilians who were killed in the camps. The wounds of the conflict are still raw, and the pain is felt by all.

The US State Department, in its 2016 Human Rights Report, said that the Afghan government has made significant progress in addressing human rights. The report praised the Afghan government for its efforts to protect and promote human rights, especially for women and children. However, it also noted that there is still much work to be done.

Global Stability in the Trump Era

A ngy American voters who feel slapped by the Washington establishment have had their say. A stunned America is still reeling from the impact of the US presidential election. Donald Trump, who defied all expectations, has not only won the presidency but also shocked the world. His victory has raised concerns about the future of democracy in the US and around the world.

In international relations, the US is no longer the dominant superpower. The US has lost its military and economic advantage and is facing challenges from China, Russia, and other countries. The US is now reacting to the new world order and trying to adapt to the changing geopolitical landscape.

Worsening Displacement Crisis in Afghanistan

By Muhammad Zahir Akbari

Afghanistan has been facing a worsening displacement crisis with the increasing violence and conflict in the country. The number of internally displaced persons (IDPs) has reached a new high, with over 3 million people displaced within the country.

The crisis is compounded by the ongoing war and the Taliban's continued efforts to regain control of the country. The situation is made worse by the limited resources and capacity of the Afghan government to address the crisis.

The US and other international partners have made efforts to address the displacement crisis, but the situation remains critical. The need for more assistance and support is urgent, and the international community must take action to help those in need.
