Aid chief pledges his commitment to education, health, and social cohesion

Aid chief in Afghanistan, Zalmay Khalilzad, expressed his gratitude for the support provided for his country’s development efforts, particularly in the areas of education, health, and social cohesion. Khalilzad thanked the international community for their support in strengthening governance, promoting democratic institutions, and advancing the country’s economic development.

The United States has been a significant contributor to the reconstruction and development of Afghanistan, providing over $9 billion in assistance since the 2001 invasion. The aid provided has supported a range of programs, including education, health, and security.

The importance of education was highlighted by Khalilzad, who noted that education is a key tool for building a peaceful and prosperous future for Afghanistan. He emphasized the need for all Afghans to have access to quality education, regardless of gender, background, or location.

In health, efforts have been focused on improving access to healthcare services, particularly in remote and underserved areas. International partners have supported the expansion of healthcare facilities and the training of healthcare professionals.

Social cohesion is crucial in building stability and reducing conflict. The aid chief highlighted initiatives that have been undertaken to promote reconciliation and community building, including programs that support dialogue and reconciliation processes.

The aid chief also acknowledged the challenges that remain, including the need for continued international support to achieve lasting peace and development in Afghanistan. He called on the international community to remain committed to the Afghan people and to continue working together to build a better future for Afghanistan.

In conclusion, the aid chief’s statements underscored the importance of education, health, and social cohesion in the reconstruction and development of Afghanistan. The international community’s ongoing support is crucial in achieving these goals, and the aid chief called on everyone to continue working towards a peaceful and prosperous future for Afghanistan.