Minister Confirms Police Failed to Secure Public

KABUL - Interior Minister Taj Mohammed Jalal on Monday said efforts must be stepped up to fill the gap between police and the people.

He confirmed that reaction within the police ranks has increased mistrust in police among the public.

"If we judge honestly, there is distance between police and the people. There are a number of shortcomings. The real demands of the people have not been addressed," Jalal said.

"The public are worried because of the gaps that are being created between police and the people. The people don’t have confidence in police. Police see themselves as highly trusted, while in reality, they are close to the people. There is a need for police to change their way of doing things. Police officers are in close contact with people, so they have to change their way of doing things," Jalal added.

The interior minister also said the government was working on a strategic plan to implement community policing to bridge the gap between police and the people.
