UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the U.N. refugee agency's Executive Director Filippo Grandi (on the Afghan refugee situation).

The UNHCR Commissioner for Refugees has a political mandate on behalf of the General Assembly and long-term measures to help ensure that the national and international community will never again see a population as large as that of the Afghan refugees.

The main obstacle to the Afghan returnees is the security and stability of the region. The Kurdish minister said that if more than 10,000 Afghan refugees are willing to return to their homes, the government will support them.

Referring to reports of crimes by the Taliban and those groups in Kunduz and Lashkargah, Grandi noted that the security situation in the region is as serious as it has ever been. In his statement, Grandi stressed that advancing in finding durable solutions for the Afghan returnees and Meeting in Amman was attended by some 50,000 Afghan refugees and members of the international community.

Most notably, the regional Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, Zalmay Khalilzad, vowed to work with UNHCR to ensure that the countries in the region will support the returnees from the efforts that has so far been made.

In his statement, Khalilzad said that the countries in the region had made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.

The official added that the countries in the region have made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.

The official added that the countries in the region have made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.

The official added that the countries in the region have made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.

The official added that the countries in the region have made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.

The official added that the countries in the region have made significant efforts, and that those efforts had led to the return of about 50,000 Afghan refugees to their homes.