Sufferings of the Rohingyas

By Kahtana Zia

The violence of Rohingya’s inherent rights and freedoms in Myanmar continues unabated and the plight of the innocent is aggravating. It is completely unjust or partial bloodshed and massacre. Women, children, and the elderly, whose lives are completely at risk. The situation is critical and the issue is at the forefront of the international community’s attention.

The Rohingya are a Muslim minority in Myanmar. They are facing persecution and violence at the hands of the Myanmar government and military. The Rohingya have been subjected to forced disappearances, sexual violence, pillaging, and other human rights abuses.

The United Nations and human rights organizations have condemned the violence and called for an end to the conflict. However, the situation on the ground remains dire, with thousands of people displaced and fleeing for their lives.

The Rohingya have been denied basic rights and freedoms, including freedom of movement, education, and access to healthcare. They are living in deplorable conditions in camps and are at risk of further violence.

The international community has expressed concern about the situation and has called for a peaceful resolution. However, the ongoing conflict and violence have led to the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people, including women and children.

The situation of the Rohingya is a clear violation of international law and human rights principles. The perpetrators of these atrocities must be held accountable for their actions.

The Rohingya are not seeking sympathy, but rather, the right to live in peace and security, with their fundamental rights and freedoms respected and protected. The world must act now to prevent further violence and ensure the well-being of the Rohingya people.
