Rahmani Stresses US Continued Support to Afghanistan

KABUL - Afghanistan's ambassador to Washington has said "passing statements" about US withdrawal or peace talks with the Taliban made in American political campaigns are "not helpful in setting Afghanistan on the pathway to a future as free, just, and democratic as possible."

Rahmani speaking at the backdoor of the sudden announcement of the American withdrawal of forces from northeast Syria, where they had been working alongside the Syrian Democratic Front against the Islamic State.

That sudden withdrawal raised new questions about US commitment to stay in Afghanistan. Even before the US forces pulled out, Turkish interest and artillery attack targets in the northern part of Syria, and Turkish ground forces stepped and turned away at an army check-post on the M4 Road due to the closure of the diplomatic mission.

The Taliban Fighting to Promote Pakistan's Interests

HERAT - Diplomats and representatives from various countries and institutions on Friday attended the first day of the Herat Security Dialogue, a conference in Herat province's capital, to discuss issues concerning the region, including a potential Afghan peace process.

Participants' remarks included a declaration of the Afghan people's desire for peace, and also an invitation to both the Taliban and the Afghan government to call a council.

Pakistan's Interests

The EU Special Envoy for Afghanistan Ambassador Roland Kieffer, referring to future governance in the country, said that if there was an "Islamic Emirate", it would be "difficult" for the EU to continue its assistance to Afghanistan.

"If the fundamental values of its citizens are respected, the EU will be there for you. The EU will support reconstruction and developments. But we have principles to respect, and with an Islamic Emirate, that would be very difficult," Kieffer said.
